

Speaker B:

Slide 3 – Why the Real Problem is Organisational

I will show why the real problem is organizational

After comparing all four proposals, we found that despite different focuses, they describe the same core issue — organisational dysfunction.

You can see the PowerPoint to find the details of our proposal's findings.

Spark's structure lacks clear accountability and effective coordination, that causes slow communication and duplicated work across departments. Without a standard governance framework, strategies fail to translate into consistent execution. In short, every surface-level problem is a symptom of deeper organizational misalignment.

Slide 4 – MIT90 Framework

The we used MIT90 Framework to shows that performance of spark depends on alignment among strategy, structure, process, technology, and people.

Spark's strategy is strong — leading NZ's digital transformation — but structure and processes are misaligned.

employees solely doing Teams work , leading to the phenomenal that information doesn't flow, and decisions are delayed.

That's why even with good tools and staff, KPIs like resolution time and NPS remain low.

The real problem isn't technology — it's organisational design.

Without clear roles and governance, even the best strategy cannot succeed.

I will hand to my teammate to show how to solve the problems
